The LAST CHASE

"C'MON, YA COWARD, chase me! I dare ya!" howled Puss, letting fly an overripe tomato. "Yer nothin' but a flea-bag! A mutt!"

Squisbi! Splat! The tomato hit Boots square in the middle of the face and dripped down his neck. Boots wiped his face as clean as he could and growled to himself, "Okay, this is it! He asked for it! I'm sick an' tired of givin' that cat a good time, chasin' him all over town! I'll chase him, all right, but this is gonna be the last chase! I'll chase him to his doom!"

Yipping and snapping, Boots turned on Puss. Howling and happy, Puss turned and fled...towards the railroad tracks. "Good!" thought Boots. "There's a train due any second. All I gotta do is chase him across at the right moment, an' I'll never see that cat again!"

Yes, the train was coming towards them, a blur of speed. Boots yapped at Puss's heels and Puss sprang onto the tracks. Boots covered his eyes. "I can't look!" he trembled. "I can't... buh?"

"Well, chase me!" Puss was yelling, large as life and twice as loud. As for the train, that had turned off to another track and not a hair of Puss's fur was ruffled.

"Hmmm, I see where I'll hafta think of some other way ta get rid of him," Boots worried. "An' I know what it is!" His eyes had caught sight of a large opening in the sidewalk, not far away. "I'll chase Puss across that, he'll fall in...an' I'll never see that pest again!"

Like a shot, Boots was after Puss. Puss, looking backward, did not see the opening into the sidewalk until it was too late. With a screech, he tum-bled in and disappeared from sight!

"Well!" grinned Boots. "I'll never see him again...buh?" As he spoke, the grin vanished from his face, for there was Puss, as sassy as ever, rising to the sidewalk on top of an elevator. And to make matters worse, Puss was thumbing his nose at Boots!

"This is the end!" Boots was so angry he gnashed his teeth together and could hardly pull them apart again. "I'll get rid of him with my own hands. That barrel! I'll make him jump into it an' then I'll roll it downhill, fast! When he gets to the bottom...smash! Goodbye, Puss!"

"Why aren'tcha chasin' me?" Puss demanded.

Boots streaked after him once more, heading right towards the barrel. And Puss did just what he'd hoped! The cat leaped into the barrel and Boots heard a happy sound:

Slurp!

"That barrel's full o' water!" he laughed. "An' cats can't swim! Oh, boy, what a break! There's the end of Puss an' all this chasin'!"

Happy at last, Boots walked off to sit in the sun and smile at the clever way in which he had gotten rid of his arch-enemy. He'd been sitting quietly for about an hour, when the fur on his neck rose and his eyes swivelled around to see...Puss's ghost!

"C'mon, chase me!" it was saying.

"Go away! Go away! Ya fell in a barrel of water an' drowned!"

"I couldn't swim, so I hadda drink my way out! Boyoboy, was that swell! I'm fatter an' sleeker an' more fulla pep than I ever was, Bootsie-boy! Ya see, I'm not a ghost an' that barrel was full of...milk!"

Blunderbunny's

FANCY FIB-FINDER

"BUNKY," ANNOUNCED BLUNDERBUNNY proudly, "you are looking at the greatest invention in the world! Also at the greatest inventor in the world! Naturally, I am talking about myself!"

Bunky looked at the odd contraption rigged up in Blunderbunny's workshop. "What is it?" he asked.

"A lie-detector," Blunderbunny explained. "Sometimes I can't get over how clever I am! Why, this invention is gonna make me a billion-trillionaire! Maybe richer! Some people are coming to look at it soon, and I guess they'll buy it because it's so stupendous!"

"Does it really tell if you're lying?" Bunky asked.

"Does it really tell!" Blunderbunny was scornful. "Just stick around and watch the demonstration...oh, here they come now!"

As the buyers entered the workshop, Blunderbunny smiled, smugly and began to tell them how wonderful his invention was.

"Does it detect lies?" asked one old goat.

"Why, it even tells if you're thinking of telling a lie!" Blunderbunny boasted.

The instant he said this, an arm came out of the lie-detector and clonked Blunderbunny over the head...bard!

"Ouch!" yipped the inventor. "Well, as I was saying, this invention is so clever, that it will prove you're wrong if you're not telling the truth and furthermore...ouch! Ouch!" Another arm had come out of the machine and clonked Blunderbunny even harder than before.

"Are you sure you're telling the truth now?" demanded the old goat.

"Sir, a Blunderbunny never, never lies!" retorted the inventor.

No sooner had he finished saying those words, when both arms came out of the lie-detector and clonked him... once, twice, three times! Then they lifted him into the air, shook him until he was dizzy and threw him to the floor!

"Well, I see no reason for us to believe you!" snorted the old goat.

"Come along, everybody!" All the buyers marched out, leaving Blunderbunny dazed and smarting.

Bunky reached down and helped Blunderbunny to his feet. "Gosh, that's the first invention of yours that really worked!" he said.

"Ohhh," Blunderbunny moaned, "shut up, Bunky!"

RIGHT, CHIEF!
I'LL GO OVER

RIGHT AWAY!

So

AH, SOMEONE WITH A BIG CASE FOR ME,
NO DOUBT!

COME IN!

WHOO-DOODIT!

The Masked Marvel!

WHAT I NEED is a big caae to solve!" muttered Whoo-Doodit, the greatest detective that ever detected anything. "Something that will make me even more famous than I am, if that's possible! Aha! I have it! I will capture the entire Lowlife Gang...single-handed!"

The sleuth had read about this dangerous gang of criminals in the paper that very day. "This is the way to fame and glory!" he said. "First, I'll disguise myself and then trail those crooks to their lair!"

From his disguise closet, Whoo-Doodit selected a striped sweater, a pair of old trousers, a bushy moustache to paste on his face and a mask to cover his eyes. "They'll never recognize me in this outfit," he smiled, slinking out of his office, down the street and across the town to the neighborhood where crooks were known to hang out.

"I'll look through all the windows around here," said the sleuth, "and the minute I see 'em...I'll pounce!"

Just as he said "pounce", Whoo-doodit felt a strong hand gripping his shoulder. "All right, Lowlife," a voice growled, "we've got you! You're going to jail!"

"But...but it's a mistake! I'm not Lowlife! I'm trying to capture him and his gang, see, and...listen to me!" In vain, Whoo-Doodit tried to explain matters to the two policemen who were hauling him off to jail. In vain, he tried to explain things to the Police Sergeant at the desk and the jailer who was ordered to toss him into a cell! Everyone said that he looked like Lowlife and that was enough!

Sulking in his cell, Whoo-Doodit was an unhappy detective. Of all the things to happen to him, to be mistaken for the very criminal he had vowed to capture! "Something is wrong here," he thought sadly.

At that instant, the real Lowlife was saying those very words to his gang, for news travels fast in the underworld. "Something is wrong here! Who is this guy that got himself arrested pretendin' to be me? Gang, we gotta get him out before he talks!"

In the dead of night, Lowlife and his gang made their way to the jailhouse. Stealthily, they stole inside, one by one, each one armed to the teeth. "Grab the jailer and get the key!" the gang leader ordered. "Gimme it! I'll get that phoney out an' see what he's tryin' to do!"

The huge key turned in the lock and Whoo-Doodit looked up from his cot to see...Lowlife! "C'mon, we're breakin' ya out!" gritted the gang leader. "Follow us!"

They tiptoed out of the jailhouse and then Whoo-Doodit had an inspiration. "If you will all follow me," he whispered, "I know a shortcut!"

"Okay, men. Follow!" Lowlife commanded.

With Whoo-Doodit in the lead, the gang followed, unable to see a thing in the pitch-blackness of the night. He seemed to be leading them around a building...and inside a door. He was leading them through a door! "What is this?" growled Lowlife, blinking in the sudden glare of electric lights.

"It's the back entrance of the jailhouse and you're all under arrest!" said Whoo-Doodit. "I got the whole gang, Chief!"

The Police Sergeant was thunderstruck, amazed and flabbergasted. "I can't believe it!" he gasped. "The entire Lowlife Gang, captured by one individual!"

"Oh, it's nothing," smiled Whoo-Doodit, "when that one individual happens to be...me!"
